1. ~~~~~ THE MIND X THE SUBJECT OF MUCH DEBATE ~~~~~
2. 1. broadly, ALL intellectual { relating to the intellect ~ the faculty of reasoning and understanding objectively } and psychological phenomena of an organism, encompassing motivational, affective, behavioral, perceptual, and cognitive systems; that is, the organized totality of an organism's mental and psychic processes and the structural and functional cognitive components on which they depend. The term, however, is also used more narrowly to denote only cognitive activities and functions, such as perceiving, attending, thinking, problem solving, language, learning, and memory. THE NATURE OF THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE MIND AND THE BODY, INCLUDING THE BRAIN AND ITS MECHANISMS OR ACTIVITIES, HAS BEEN, AND CONTINUES TO BE, THE SUBJECT OF MUCH DEBATE. See MIND–BODY PROBLEM; philosophy of mind JOG.2453.
3. 2. the SUBSTANTIVE CONTENT of such mental and psychic processes.
4. 3. CONSCIOUSNESS OR AWARENESS, particularly as specific to an individual JOG 2454.
5. 4. a set of emergent properties automatically derived from a brain that has achieved sufficient biological sophistication. In this sense, the mind is considered more the PROVINCE of humans and of human consciousness than of organisms in general.
6. 5. human consciousness regarded as an immaterial entity distinct from the brain. See Cartesian dualism; GHOST IN THE MACHINE JOG.2455.
7. 6. the brain itself and its activities. In this view, the mind essentially is both the anatomical organ and what it does.
8. 7. intention or volition.
9. 8. opinion or point of view.

A&Q ][ Q&A:

1. ~~~~~~ THE MIND X THE SUBJECT OF MUCH DEBATE ~~~~~~
2. MIND–BODY PROBLEM: the problem of accounting for and describing the relationship between mental and physical processes (PSYCHE X soma). Solutions to this problem fall into six broad categories: (a) interactionism, in which mind and body are separate processes that nevertheless exert mutual influence (see Cartesian dualism JOG.2455); (b) parallelism, in which mind and body are separate processes with a point-to-point correspondence but no causal connection (see occasionalism; preestablished harmony); (c) idealism, in which only mind exists and the soma is a function of the psyche; (d) double-aspect theory, in which body and mind are both functions of a common entity (see neutral monism); (e) epiphenomenalism, in which mind is a by-product of bodily processes; and (f) materialism, in which body is the only reality and the psyche is nonexistent.
3. Categories (a) and (b) are varieties of dualism; the remainder are varieties of monism. In the context of psychopathology, two central questions arising from the mind–body problem are which sphere takes precedence in the genesis and development of illness and how does each sphere affect the other. Also called body–mind problem.
4. philosophy of mind: the branch of philosophy concerned with QUESTIONS about THE NATURE and functioning of mind and consciousness and the relationship of mind and mental activity to brain and body and to the external world (see mind–body problem). It is deeply concerned with the relationships among language, thought, and action.

A&Q ][ Q&A:

1. ~~~~~ THE MIND X THE SUBJECT OF MUCH DEBATE ~~~~~
2. Cartesian dualism: the position taken by René Descartes that the world comprises two distinct and incompatible classes of substance: res extensa, or extended substance, which extends through space; and res cogitans, or thinking substance, which has no extension in space. The body (including the brain) is composed of extended and divisible substance, whereas the mind is not. For Descartes, this means that the mind would continue to exist even if the material body did not. He accepted that there is interaction between mind and body, holding that in some activities the mind operates independently of bodily influences, whereas in others the body exerts an influence. Similarly, in some bodily activities there is influence from the mind, whereas in others there is not.

Descartes proposed that the locus for the interaction of the mind and body is the point in the pineal gland in the brain termed the conarium. However, to the question of how such incompatible substances can interact at all, Descartes had no answer. See dualism; ghost in the machine; mind–body problem.

3. GHOST IN THE MACHINE: a phrase used to emphasize the problems associated with Cartesian dualism, in which THE MIND IS SEEN AS A NONPHYSICAL ENTITY (a “GHOST”) that somehow inhabits and interacts with a mechanical body (the “machine”). See dualism; mind–body problem. [coined by British philosopher Gilbert Ryle (1900–1976)]
4. dualism: n. the position that reality consists of two separate substances, defined by René Descartes as thinking substance (mind) and extended substance (matter). In the context of the mind–body problem, dualism is the position that the mind and the body constitute two separate realms or substances. Dualistic positions raise the question of how mind and body interact in thought and behavior. Compare monism. See also Cartesian dualism. —dualist adj., n. —dualistic adj.

2. 4. a set of emergent properties automatically derived from a brain that has achieved sufficient biological sophistication. In this sense, the mind is considered more the PROVINCE of humans and of human consciousness than of organisms in general.
3. FREE WILL: the power or capacity of a human being for self-direction. The function of the will is to be inclined or disposed toward an idea or action. The concept of free will thus suggests that inclinations, dispositions, thoughts, and actions are not determined entirely by forces over which people have no independent directing influence. Free will is generally seen as necessary for moral action and responsibility and is implied by much of our everyday experience, in which we are conscious of having the power to do or forbear (see paradox of freedom). However, it has often been dismissed as illusory by advocates of determinism, who hold that all occurrences, including human actions, are predetermined. See also agent; volition.
4. WILL: 1. the capacity or faculty by which a human being is able to make choices and determine his or her own behaviors in spite of influences external to the person. See free will; volition. 2. a determined and persistent purpose or intent.

A&Q ][ Q&A:

1. ~~~~~ THE BRAIN X INSTINCT VS VOLITION ~~~~~
2. INSTINCT: 1. an innate, species-specific biological force that impels an organism to do something, particularly to perform a certain act or respond in a certain manner to specific stimuli. See also hormic psychology. 2. in classical psychoanalytic theory, a basic biological drive (e.g., hunger, thirst, sex, aggression) that must be fulfilled in order to maintain physical and psychological equilibrium. Sigmund Freud classified instincts into two types: those derived from the life instinct and those derived from the death instinct. See also component instinct; erotic instinct; libido; satisfaction of instincts; sexual instinct. 3. in popular usage, any inherent or unlearned predisposition (behavioral or otherwise) or motivational force. —instinctive or instinctual adj.

3. VOLITION: 1. the faculty by which an individual decides upon and commits to a particular course of action, especially when this occurs without direct external influence. The term encompasses a crucial set of activities involving the self, including choice and decision, self-control, intentional action, and an active rather than passive response to events. According to self-regulatory resources theory, volition depends on a limited resource that is expended whenever the self makes a decision or exerts control. 2. the act of exercising this faculty.
